Jeems and Lize had determined on this, the most important event in their lives, to visit the city and see the world, particularly that portion of it known as Parkersburg. No wonder they were amused and delighted, when the locomotive, steaming and snorting, with the train of beautiful crimson cars following it, came in sight.
"These your trunks?" said the baggage-said Jeems.

The trunks (a spotted hair trunk and a very old-fashioned valice) were soon in the baggage-car, followed by Jeems and Lize.
"I'll be derned if a railroad ain't a fine thing, said Jeems, seating himself on his of his tight-bodied blue, adorned with resplendent metal buttons, out of the dust. Lize, set here by me." "Come out of that," said the baggage-"The hell I am! D'ye s'pose I don't know what I'm about? These is my traps, and I calculate to stay where they ar'. The noise in the street had died away, and quiet reigned in the Swann House. The young man on the watch dozed on his chair. The clerk (rather corpulent) was about to retire, when he thought he smelt gas; the guests (some of them) thought they smelt gas. Much against by the bride and groom. The clerk concluded to knock at the door of the room, "Who's there?" came from the inside.

Columbus Female Institute. We visited this Institute vesterday in mpany with Col. Adams, of the Eastern rion, and our distinguished fellow-citizen, Hen, J. J. Pettus, of Kemper. High-ly as we had thought of the school here-tofore—knowing that it was one of the largest Female Colleges in the South still we were taken by surprise by the real superiority and completeness of the estabment. We knew that there were such Institutions thousands of miles away from had, right here in Mississippi, a school is of vastly more importance, the interior machinery and operations of the college gratifying to the citizens of Columbus and the numerous friends of the Institute throughout the Southwest. In this Laborawe think other institutions should imitate. It is a full and admirable apparatus for complete human skeleton—a fine set of charts hanging on the wall, etc., etc. Our children should be taught more of the it is a false délicacy which has prevented this study in some female schools and which we are glad to see this Institution has had the good sense to rebuke.

The Geological Cabinet is, we have no doubt, the most extensive and best arranged one (thanks to Dr. Stillman of our city) in this part of the country. A gen-tleman from Tuscaloosa, a graduate of the University of Alabama and familiar with all its apparatus, visited this collection a few days since, and remarked that it was decidedly superior to the Cabinet of that University, though it was said to have a very fine collection.

One other feature we must allude to, and this is the elegant Library and Read-
